

To the Frontend Team at Twitter:

Hello there! I would like to express my interest in the Frontend Apprenticeship position at Twitter HQ in San Francisco. My interest in the creation of products has taken me from music -- where I created and crafted performances for consumers -- to web development -- where I create and craft web applications for users. I believe that my passion for solving challenges, strong commitment to not giving up, and interest in making a difference for a user's application experience make me an ideal candidate to join the Frontend team at Twitter.

As a candidate, here's what I could immediately bring to the table:

An effective collaborator: As a musician, I am able to collaborate effectively with accompanists and other musicians to create concerts and/or recitals that were enjoyed by consumers. As a web developer, I am able to collaborate with other developers to create a scalable application. Coming together to decide design systems, layout and how the application was going to look was imperative to success. Whether it is music or web development, communication and working well with others was key to success.

A passionate problem-solver: Everything I have engaged in so far has all been driven by my keen interest in solving puzzles. Even as an educator and flutist, I made sure to dedicate some part of my day to pinpointing faults in playing that created less-than-desirable sounds from the flutist. If I don't know the answer to something, I have the drive and grit to try to find the answer to the problem. It is this passion that has driven every one of my career decisions thus far and has served me well so far in web development.

I strive to a new best everyday in my craft and I am looking forward to contributing my skills and experiences to the new apprenticeship program at Twitter. I hope to have the opportunity to speak with you further about how I can be an asset to the team.

Sincerely,
Christina Kopecky
